“ I found Abraham in the church parking lot, crying and very skinny. I opened my door and he jumped in. I looked around. Nobody seemed to be caring so he came home with me. He was not chipped and he was very sick. He had an overwhelming infection and he was diabetic. The doctor recommend euthanasia. I said no, let's give him some time and we had him regulated on insulin the next day. He gained weight and he was very happy. His favorite place to rest was on top of my kitchen stove. He was black and white and the stove was black and white. He blended right in. Little Abraham lived three good months before he had a stroke. It was a short time, but it probably was the best months of his life. I miss you, Abraham. You were a sweet boy.
